Act II, Scene 2 (BGL) — Eight years later

Seriously. How is this a big deal? You had a couple of beers, that's all. If your family had money, this would be over already. Your friend Rebecca got caught last month, but it just got handled. This isn't really a big deal.

But you can't lose your license! Your job is the only freedom you have. As long as you still have a job you still have some spending money. If you didn't have money of your own, you couldn't go out with your friends, and you'd be stuck wearing clothing from Goodwill. Plus there are some days you think your job is the only reason your mom lets you out of the house.

Your dad is a big lawyer. He hasn't been around much, except for birthdays and holidays, but he helps out with money and stuff. He could fix this problem, you just need to convince him that he should help you out.
